

Wines by the Glass

Featured wine

Towering over the alpine city of Trento, at some 700+ meters of altitude, are the tiny parcels of vines tended by Matteo Furlani. After studying agronomy, Matteo set his sights on working his land in the most natural of ways. Chemicals were never a part of what Matteo's predecessors used to tend the vines yet Matteo took an even more rigorous approach, incorporating biodynamic preparations and methodologies in the vineyards today. Soils are surface clay over schist and broken granite, known as sasso dolomitico, planted with varieties in several small parcels surrounding the village of Povo, directly above Trento. Local varieties are prized above all though there is a small planting of Pinot Noir and Chardonnay used to make the "Metodo Interrotto" sparkling wines. Wines are fermented either in cement tanks or small glass demijohns with no temperature control, no yeast, no sulfur. To clarify the wines they are often racked into demijohns during the winter and placed outside in the snow allowing the wine to naturally settle.

It is hard to find anyone who doesn't like "Bianco Alpino" known for their colourful, light, and delicious wines. Lovely on its own, or with fresh and simple preparations to enhance the notes of green apple and pear. Dry with restrained acidity and a round finish.
